

What is the extracellular microenvironment?

The extracellular microenvironments are comprised of extracellular matrix (ECM), ECM degrading enzymes and cleaved fragments, growth factors/cytokines, and various forms of glycans. Physical factors such as hypoxia and mechanical forces are also important constituents of extracellular microenvironments.

Extracellular environments

